

Learning from others' experience

Ted Talks feedback

During the international week, you had to see some Ted Talks.
Regardless of the facts that you had to do it and that it was not a question of personal choice, let's try to see what you could learn from these oral presentations made by S3 students.

It is always easy to be more critical with other people than with one selves, so the idea is not to criticize and depreciate other people's work and efforts, but to assess what was useful, what could be improved etc...

So here are a few points that could help you express a relevant feedback of the different Ted Talks you saw:

- The good ideas:

- The positive points:

- The negative points:

- What you would like to reproduce in your future presentations:

- What you would like to differently:

- What could be improved:

- What was missing:
